

EXPLORING HEALTHY COPING SKILLS TO MANAGE STRESS, CRISIS, AND TRAUMA

Experiencing betrayal can cause extreme emotional flooding; making self-regulation difficult. When the mind and body are in a state of panic or "survival mode", it is almost impossible to think clearly and rationally. It is important to have safe outlets in the recovery process along with defined "rules of engagement" with your partner

MENU OF DOWN/UP-REGULATING OPTIONS

Try to incorporate these practices and behaviors into your daily life to heal/rewire your trauma response and help improve your sense of safety when engaging in vulnerable, intimate connections with others

Grounding techniques

Mindfulness meditation

Visualizations

Body Scan/Progressive Relaxation

Breath work

Dance/movement/Stand on One Foot

Tai chi/qigong

Yoga

Engage in a spiritual/religious practice

Pets/animal therapy

Sleep

Exercise

Sing Songs

Play Instrument

Play a sport, ride a bike

Talk therapy

Eat right

Avoid substance use/abuse

Tapping Arms or Legs rhythmically

Journaling

Gratitude List

Talk to a trusted person

Go out in nature

Serve others/community service

Neurofeedback

Social Engagement

Healthy/Safe touch (hugs, massage, etc.)

Big Sighs

Scream into a pillow

Get a punching bag

Attend a support group/share your story with people who are safe

